Using the QKR QKR is a Quantum Key Distribution system by definition it creates a secure communication channel between two communication partners. The channel uses quantum mechanics of atoms to make encryption secure which is not possible with a classical channel. By definition Quantum Key Distribution means that the communication channel is safe for public transmission yet can be decrypted by an authorized user. The secret key is generated and transmitted between two partners using a quantum channel. The Quantum channel also is called the quantum channel. QPR and QRT are QD Systems variations in transmission. The QD system is designed for government communication and the channel is secure for public transmission. They differ from QKR in that there are no transmissions during the process of key generation. There are also variations on the QD system. The QRP system eliminates the need for a Public Channel by establishing a secure communication channel through which the Public Channel can be established, this type of system can be used for local, national, or international secure communication. The QKA is similar to QKR but is created by the use of a Physical Channel. The TQD method is used to generate two keys within two bodies simultaneously. This prevents one of the bodies in the system from computing the key. The technology of QKA dates back to the 1940s. Uses for QKR -Key Distribution -Encryption -Public Key Cryptography Using the QKR The secret key is generated and transmitted between two partners using a quantum channel. The environmental lobby group today warned that for three million households the cost of gas and electricity "will rise enough to double the cost of the basic energy bills to a level that many people cannot afford". Their research shows that households in Liverpool are the most vulnerable to the increase because of a spike in the cost of new shale gas, and those on low incomes are worst affected. This follows the Government's announcement last year that the average household will see their energy bills treble between now and 2017. Friends of the Earth energy campaigner Mary Creagh said: "The Government has no excuses for failing to ensure that the gap between the richest and the poorest families is never again allowed to widen
