I recently installed SuperCollider and I would like to be able to hear it with other programs that are already open and are playing. I installed SuperCollider from the default Ubuntu repositories, so it is installed in the default Ubuntu menu. Is there a way to automatically detect that SuperCollider is currently installed and automatically start it? A: I don't know the default Ubuntu Software Center, but I would suggest that you try these two: The easiest solution is to install the individual packages via terminal and run them from the Applications menu, while the following solution will simply launch the application on startup. SuperCollider Open the Terminal (type terminal in the Dash and press Enter) Type sudo apt-get install supercollider LokalRadio Type sudo apt-get install lokalradio Note: there is a bug with installing SuperCollider via the Software Center and the main repository, but the terminal solution should be fine. { "created_at": "2015-02-27T22:27:37.060293", "description": "Simple open-source library for building fast, elegant REST APIs.", "fork": false, "full_name": "voxpelli/rest", "language": "Ruby", "updated_at": "2015-03-10T07:01:54.717820" } but was was sitting on 82157476af
