

In this article, I discuss the film "The Abyss" starring Jessica Alba and Lenny Abrahamson. The film is a psychological thriller about a young scuba instructor who goes missing at the bottom of the Mariana trench. I go on to talk about what makes this movie so creepy, as well as other possible reasons why it should be considered to be one of the best horror movies ever made. Overall, I think that The Abyss is a movie worth checking out because it offers a terrifying view into the mind of those who are stuck in their own little worlds. In his new production, an executive producer from AMC tells us how they're going to make Netflix great again with shows like Alien Nation and Hell on Wheels. We learn about the making of killer sharks and the plot of the anime "Mermaid Melody Pichi Pichi Pitch" (which sounds like something I'd like to see). From producing (and starring in) cult classics to working with some of your favorite directors, these are some of our favorite episodes. The Netflix Original sci-fi film Maniac has come out this week. The film stars Emma Stone, Jonah Hill, Sally Field and Justin Theroux. The plot revolves around a mental patient (Stone) who believes she is on an episode of her favorite tv show, "Manic", which features mad killers killing people across the country while she gets to control them. This week's podcast features our thoughts and feelings about this movie. The Netflix Original sci-fi film "Maniac" came out today and we talk about what we think of the movie.
